

What is a community garden?

A community garden can be an accessible space of, by, and for the local community for the purpose of gardening, establishing and restoring natural habitats, growing food, and supporting wellness, community engagement, cultural exchange, and collaborative events.

What is a community garden?

A community garden supports the wellness of its local community with an accessible space in a Chicago neighborhood that plants, but not limited to, flowers, fruits, vegetables, trees, shrubs, and attempts to establish a natural habitat for birds, bees, butterflies, etc. The community garden, as a place to meet, respects, embraces, and accommodates cultural and collaborative activities that includes music performances, art displays, health issues, and various workshops/demonstrations for the benefit of its volunteers and neighbors.

Bullet Points (including benefits):

Non-profit, dues, active participation, workshops, skills building, gardening support, plants and tools resources,