Beneficial Insects for the Garden

Saturday, July 8 @ 10am
Center for Green Technology, 445 N. Sacramento Blvd. Chicago, IL

Do you need an army of green lacewings, a crew of lady beetles, or a stagmomantid team to help in your garden? Come meet the good bugs that provide natural pest control in our landscapes and gardens. Join Allen Lawrance, Associate Curator of Entomology at the Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum, for an exciting and informative workshop about beneficial insects for the garden.

Pollinators, predators, and parasitoids are among the many insects you may be delighted to find in your garden. By helping plants reproduce and controlling pests these beneficial insects provide valuable ecosystem services that can help reduce our reliance on insecticides. Learn about some of the various species of beneficial insects you may encounter and how to encourage them to inhabit your garden.

When: Saturday, July 8 at 10am

Where: Center for Green Technology, 445 N. Sacramento Blvd., Chicago, IL

This is a FREE event! Please register in advance, seating is limited.
